

Close Window

'NRIs head home, MNCs spoilt for choice'

Agencies

Posted online: 2011-06-27 12:45:51+05:30

New DelhiNon-resident Indian (NRI) professionals are starting to come back to home and multinational companies are now spoiled for choice in picking from the cream of attractive resource pool of India, says a MyHiringClub.com website survey.

Senior human resource personnel and top management of 237 employers and 690 recruitment consultants were queried about their NRI professionals hiring intentions and trends in present quarter vis-a-vis the last year and their views about the whole year.

All companies and consultants are associated with MyHiringClub.com. The survey was conducted across 14 industry segments that included seven Indian cities

Kumar said: "A lot of high value NRI professional recruitment is likely to take place in this year and in the coming few years. For NRIs, this clearly underlines the fact regarding advantages of returning back to India outweighing the disadvantages by far."

Recent economic growth in India with many good opportunities has fuelled the NRI thought process to head back.

In addition to that, many US companies are opening their offices in India and hiring more to target the growing market in Asia.